New York Design Week 2026: Live updates from the Wallpaper* team

Design is taking over the Big Apple from 14-20 May – and our editors are here for the action. Here are the latest news, launches and goings-on from NYCxDDesign

New York Design Week 2026 is back in full swing and the Wallpaper* team is here (including members from across the pond!) for the action. From 14-20 May, we'll be criss-crossing the city to bring you live reportage from the hundreds of shows, debuts and parties popping up around the Big Apple. If you're in town, be sure to bookmark this page (and our handy-dandy map of happenings) for NYCxDDesign, the city's official design celebration, as well as news straight from the city's hottest showroom and galleries; the convention floor of ICFF; plus the sophomore edition of Afternoon Light. Also not to miss, our takeover of everyone's favourite magazine store, Casa, with our newly-released travel guides, including a special edition devoted to New York. Get it while it's hot.

Bright ideas from Lucifer Lighting

Here's a secret: one of the best art galleries in New York isn't in a Chelsea Gallery, but in a Tribeca lighting showroom. Lucifer Lighting, the family-run, San Antonio, Texas-based company that's been a go-to source for architects and designers for 45 years, has recently partnered with Pace gallery to install a joyful survey of works from the late American pop artist Robert Indiana. Yes, you'll spy a mini Love sculpture, but also, in honour of America's 250th birthday, a variety of patriotic prints – all beautifully lit, of course. To celebrate, Lucifer hosted a panel discussion moderated by journalist Ian Volner that included architect Marlon Blackwell, Lucifer founder Gilbert Mathews, Robert Indiana Legacy Initiative director Emeline Salama-Caro and Grammy Award-winner Randall Poster on a discussion surrounding the meaning of 'made in America.' This lighting company is clearly serving up bright ideas in more ways than one. – Anna Fixsen
